Executive Summary

For children and their families across British Columbia, the summer months signal the end of the school year and a time to rest and relax before moving onto the next grade. It is also a time to have fun, connect with their local libraries, and join the BC Summer Reading Club (BC SRC). In the summer of 2023, BC SRC was successfully delivered to 71 public libraries in British Columbia with an all-time high of over 92,000 registered participants through our hybrid model. With our popular time travel theme, Journey Through Time, BC SRC and libraries invited participants to explore the past, present, and future through engaging literacy-based programs and activities. We saw an increase in class visits, community outreach events, and partnerships across the province and more than ever, we saw how libraries were able to connect with their local communities by promoting a free and inclusive program for children of all ages. We also heard from libraries that being able to provide a high quality, free summer program has never been more important with rising costs impacting families and libraries themselves.

“The “free” element of SRC has never been more important. Several times, we have heard feedback that as costs increase, the ability of parents to pay for high quality programming for their children decreases. SRC is filling an increasingly wide gap for many families, and VPL is fortunately to have the resources to be able to provide over 300 SRC programs each summer.”

As libraries begin to recover from the COVID-19 pandemic by heading back into their communities to deliver in-person class visits and participate in more outreach events, the ongoing challenges caused by the climate crisis and forest fire evacuations, as well as staffing limitations, continue to impact libraries in various ways. On a provincial level, BC Summer Reading Club aims to provide support and empower libraries to implement the program in the ways that best meet the needs of their individual communities. We emphasize different ways to provide accessible and inclusive programming to one's community, leading by example in our annual SRC manual and variety of online resources. Our ongoing commitment to creating a more accessible British Columbia involves developing more professional development opportunities for library staff and it continues to be a priority that aligns with the values of the Province, public libraries, and the British Columbia Library Association. We remain grateful for the financial support for these ongoing initiatives from the BC Ministry of Municipal Affairs, Public Libraries Branch and we look forward to returning in 2024 with a series of new resources.

We gratefully acknowledge the financial support of the Province of British Columbia through the Ministry of Municipal Affairs; BC SRC is made possible by a $65,000 grant from the BC Ministry of Municipal Affairs, Public Libraries Branch. CUPE BC also generously provided a $50,000 donation, ensuring that children across the province received a celebratory medal for participating in BC SRC.

“CUPE BC members are incredibly proud to be the lead sponsor of the Summer Reading Club medals. This partnership with the BC Library Association supports learning and literacy, helping young people around the province discover the world through their local library. The program also helps kids discover the many services and resources provided by libraries and library workers, turning new readers into life-long library patrons. Our members working in libraries across the province are excited to support this program in the coming year, and we know their dedication will help this the program achieve success again in 2024.”

What's New for 2023

In 2023, these were some new additions and/or changes for BC Summer Reading Club:

- Welcomed new Provincial Assistant, Sabrina Gurniak for a 1-year term
- Created new training videos and BC SRC glossary for library staff
- Expanded Participant Feedback Survey to be advertised by libraries to their communities
- Moved towards a passive program/event with BC SRC Artist versus a virtual event
- Added Yukon Public Library as one of our new external library systems
- Connected with TD Summer Reading Club, Library and Archives Canada, and New Brunswick Public Library Services to plan accessibility workshops and professional development opportunities for library staff who work with summer reading programs

More details about these additions and changes can be found throughout the report.

“My children asked to go to the library everyday. They participated in many of the activities offered by the library. They also requested multiple books throughout the summer. They were excited about reading and the prizes offered by the library. Thank you for this wonderful program that has grown their love of the library and reading.”

BC SRC 2023 Theme and Artist

For 2023, children and families across the province were invited to time travel with BC Summer Reading Club. Journey Through Time was a theme with endless possibilities that sparked creative programs in the annual Staff Manual, including a celebration of all things retro which resonated with many library workers' and caregivers' sense of nostalgia. To make the time travel vision come to life, BC SRC worked with Richmond-based author and illustrator Jeni Chen, who brought her incredibly playful and bold style to our program. When Jeni suggested incorporating dinosaurs as the Journey Through Time characters, we knew we had something that would resonate with many children and generate excitement for the program. The characters were colourful and fun, and each dinosaur had a personality and interests that connected to a specific sub-theme. With artwork featuring creatures of the past, Journey Through Time found a way to highlight the various possibilities of the future to inspire our young participants.

Image Caption: A dinosaur drawn by Elodie S., Age 7, Whistler Public Library

In addition to her artwork, BC SRC enlisted Jeni's help this year to run a passive online program and contest where she created a quick tutorial on how to draw a dinosaur which also included some helpful illustration tips and tricks. Children across the province shared their amazing art and Jeni selected a few of her favourites to win prizes. One of the highlights included that Jeni got to personally meet one of the young artists who attended her workshop at the Whistler Public Library.

Overview of BC SRC Registration

BC SRC is pleased to report a 12% increase in registration numbers, with this year's numbers being the highest ever reported. A total of 89,489 children signed up in-person and 2,607 registered online using the BC SRC Online Reading Tracker, for a total of 92,096 registrants. Registration numbers have returned to and exceeded pre-pandemic totals.

While many libraries reported increased registration numbers, it is important to acknowledge that some library systems had lower than anticipated registrants due to forest fire evacuations. Furthermore, Okanagan Regional Library (ORL) underreported its numbers due to the loss of the North Shuswap branch in a forest fire.

While the Online Reading Tracker was initially introduced as an avenue to continue SRC activities during the early onset of the COVID-19 pandemic and subsequent lockdowns, it has since become an alternative mode to participate in the program. Since 2021, the Online Reading Tracker has had a steady number of registered users, but approximately less than one third of those users exclusively use the digital tracker. While 9,794 children registered online, only 2,607 participants indicated that they would exclusively use the Online Reading Tracker. The overwhelming preferred method to participate in BC SRC is still the physical reading record. However, we recognize the Online Reading Tracker is still an important option, and ensures that more children and families can be a part of BC SRC.

“Our SRC this year had an amazing turnout. The ending to SRC was around the time the West Kelowna, Kelowna, Lake Country and Shuswap forest fires were happening. Families were very appreciative of having the normalcy of SRC to ground them. The medals we handed out at the end of summer took on extra meaning for families experiencing such upheaval.”

Registration Numbers Over the Years

Graph 1: An overview of how BC SRC registration numbers have grown and were impacted by a global pandemic between 2018 to 2023.

The above graph illustrates how BC Summer Reading Club registration numbers were impacted by the COVID-19 Pandemic in 2020 and gradually recovered over the last three years. Along with increased registration numbers, libraries increased program promotion through in class visits, community outreach events, and partnerships.

Community

School Visits

Outreach at schools was increased by 53 % this year, with 67 libraries reporting 3,906 in-person and virtual class visits to promote the program. A total of 120,702 children and 14,118 adults were reached at these visits that occurred between May and June. Libraries shared that in-person class visits were likely the reason for the increase in their registration numbers and also provided opportunities to directly connect with teachers in their community.

“School visits provide a valuable opportunity for branch librarians to connect with the majority of the kids who attend school in their catchment. “I saw you at my school!” is a constant refrain in June. These visits also provide a rare opening for librarians to connect with teachers face-to-face.”

From Vancouver Public Library Staff

Community Outreach

In 2023, there were 644 community outreach visits where public libraries championed BC SRC at a variety of local events such as at farmer’s markets, museums, community days, Indigenous community events, parades, and more. Libraries also reported 497 community partnerships developed through BC SRC that included prize donations and collaborative events.

“The SRC brings families into our library who are not already library members. We also had several families new to the community, and new to Canada, join us this summer. They felt the library was a fun, safe place for their children to spend time this summer. The SRC also provides a way for children from throughout our community to get together and make new friendships and try new activities. They really enjoyed the opportunity to exercise their creative muscles.”

Programs

This year, libraries reported 2,486 in-house library programs and events that reached 57,471 children and 15,749 adults. When compared to last year's numbers, there was a -2% decrease in programs offered, but a 21% increase in participation from children. The decrease in programs offered can be attributed to the ongoing impacts of the climate crisis, where many communities had to follow evacuation orders. In addition, some libraries reported general staffing limitations that impeded their capacity to run programs. While all libraries were able to provide reading records to participants, 8 out of 71 participating BC libraries were unable to run any events and activities this year.

“It is really great to see parents and families supporting children's love of reading. It's great to see children excited about reading and being part of SRC. It was really wonderful to have the community gather together for the medal ceremony and kick-off party. These turned into the biggest community events the library ever does. These opportunities are completely facilitated by the structure of BCSRC and otherwise we wouldn't be able to bring community together in this way around a love of literacy. We love to see the children so excited about joining the club, getting stickers and working toward their goal of reading a little each day. The children are really proud to earn their medal at the end of the summer.”

Community Visits, Programs, and Partnership Comparison

When comparing SRC-related community events over the last three years, there is a direct correlation with increased participation. Whether in the form of class visits and/or community outreach, these events provide a valuable opportunity to promote the program and library services directly to children and their families, as well as offering opportunities to build partnerships with other neighbourhood services. SRC-related in-library programming is also a way for libraries to increase foot traffic into their buildings and connect with children of all ages through guided literacy-based activities. At its core, BC SRC is a relationship-building tool for libraries, supporting a meaningful cause that brings their communities together.

“The program was fun and exciting for my kids. As a result, we access the library as a family more often than we have in previous years.”

Participant Celebrations and Medals

One of the longstanding traditions and most exciting aspects of SRC are the ways that libraries across the BC celebrate their participants. Libraries typically award participants with medals for either completing SRC reading goals or participation, with at least 24 library systems celebrating their participants with medal ceremonies.

In 2023, BC SRC was able to supply libraries with 34,000 medals due to the generous $50,000 donation from CUPE BC. When reviewing the feedback from the Participant Feedback Survey, one of the common threads that appeared was the impact of receiving a medal on a child's reading confidence. The annual BC SRC medal has become a memento of summer traditions with children collecting them year after year. The continued support from CUPE BC allows children and their families across the province to celebrate their summer reading.

Evaluation

Between September 2022 and April 2023, BC SRC Provincial Coordinator Stephanie Usher researched the history of summer reading programs (SRPs) in North America as part an independent study course for UBC's School of Information (iSchool). The literature review analyzed the various shifts and trends that have occurred since the first inception of public library summer reading programs in the late 1800s, with a particular interest in how these programs have expanded and evolved in scope throughout history. As part of the research, it was revealed that SRPs have rarely been formally evaluated from the participants' and/or caregivers' perspectives and success is often measured by registration numbers. Many libraries and summer reading programs do not evaluate their programs based on particular outcomes and/or benchmarks.

Since 2020, BC SRC has offered a Caregiver Feedback Survey sent out through the Online Reading Tracker registration list. This year, to expand the survey's reach, BC SRC asked libraries to promote the survey in-house in order to engage more participants. While registration numbers can provide an insight into the general interest in the program, the numbers do not reflect if the program is meeting certain benchmarks and should not be the only measure of success. As a result, the survey includes measurable outcomes that centre on community, reading confidence, and inclusion, including if the program is meeting accessibility needs, as well as an open comment section. The combination of both quantitative and qualitative data allows BC SRC and public libraries across the province to gain a better understanding of participants' experience and make informed changes to the program.

“This was a great goal setting exercise to keep up with reading. We mostly did it independently but even with that my daughter still knew she was part of something bigger in the community that other children were doing.”

From a Participant's Caregiver

The survey opens with demographic information such as number of participants in household, school grade(s) in June, local library system, and participation method. As part of the demographic information, the survey asked the following yes/no/uncertain questions:

- Did your child(ren) complete their weekly reading/literacy goals for at least 7 weeks this summer?
- If your child(ren) has a disability, were their accessibility needs were met in the SRC program and/or activities?

A definition from the American Library Association for disability was included to provide context to the accessibility question.

The feedback survey also used the desired outcomes to measure how SRC impacted participants' experience of the program. The following questions were presented with a Likert scale rating from Strongly Agree to Strongly Disagree:

- My child(ren) felt connected to a community through SRC or their local library
- My child(ren) built up their confidence in their reading skills this summer
- My child(ren) felt included in the SRC program and/or activities

These outcomes are centred around the guiding values and principles of BC Summer Reading Club as a program that facilitates community connections, a love of reading, and inclusion.

“I really liked how the program wrapped up. After completing 7 weeks, we took the tracking sheet to our local library (Mount Pleasant Branch in Vancouver). The librarians made a very big deal out of presenting my daughter with the medal. It really increased her pride in her accomplishment.”

This year, BC SRC received 852 responses for the survey between August 14 until September 15, 2023. This is the most direct feedback we have ever received, and we hope to see this number grow in future years as the survey provides participants and their caregivers an avenue to share their thoughts on the program directly with their local library. The feedback provides data for not only BC public libraries to better understand their participants needs, but can also help BC SRC on a provincial level make informed changes and/or improvements to the program.

Key Findings

- 1,376 children represented in the survey (reflecting that some parents have multiple children)
- 46 out of 71 participating BC public libraries received feedback
- 91% of respondents indicated that their child(ren) completed their SRC reading goals
- When it came to participation methods:
  - 63% of respondents indicated that their child(ren) participated using the print reading record
  - 14% of respondents indicated that their child(ren) participated using the online reading tracker
  - 19% of respondents indicated that their child(ren) participated using a combination of the print reading record and online reading tracker
  - 4% of respondents indicated that they were unsure of which method their child(ren) used to participate in the program
- 77% of respondents indicated that their children did not have a disability and 2.4% of respondents chose not to respond to this question
  - Of the remaining 20.5% of respondents, 43.1% indicated that their child(ren)'s accessibility needs were met and 56.9% indicated that their child(ren)'s accessibility needs were not met
- 78% of respondents either strongly agreed or agreed that their child(ren) felt part of a wider community through SRC and/or their local library
- 80% of respondents either strongly agreed or agreed that their child(ren) built up their reading confidence this summer
- 80% of respondents either strongly agreed or agreed that their child(ren) felt included in the SRC program and/or related activities
- 55% of respondents (469 responses) included qualitative feedback in the form of the additional feedback box, which was directly shared with the identified local library

Future Plans for Survey

This was the first year we extended the survey to be promoted in-person at libraries, and we hope to see more responses and buy-in from libraries in the future. To better address and understand the accessibility needs of respondents, in future the survey will include an option to provide additional information. In previous years when the survey was only sent to online registrants, it included a question asking if children read more this summer; this question was not asked this year but will be re-added for the following year as an additional quantifiable measure to show the benefits of the program. An additional question that focuses on if children who participated visited their library throughout the summer may also provide insights into how participants and their families are engaging with their local libraries. The long-term goal is to collect data and feedback over several years to track changes and make informed improvements to the program on both a provincial and local level.

“This program and our experience was absolutely wonderful! Our daughter learned of the program in June at her school. She was excited from day one. Colouring in the footsteps for reading accomplishments helped her feel more motivated and confident. She talked about the program (and the much-anticipated medal) all summer. We went away at one point, but still she remembered to keep up with her reading. When the time came to bring her card in, she was so excited the night before. At the library, the staff were so nice to do a little medal presentation and round of applause for her. She jumped around outside because she was so happy. I've told friends and coworkers about this program, and the response is universally positive. I think the positive ripple effects of a program like this that helps cultivate children's literacy and self-efficacy may go farther than we could know. Thank you to everyone who made it happen.”

Accessibility

As with previous years, the annual BC SRC manual underwent an internal inclusion review guided by the principles of Dr. Tess Prendergast of UBC's School of Information (iSchool). Content creators were mindful to include ways to scale down/up programs to include children of all ages and abilities. The manual's booklists were also shared with the Centre for Equitable Library Access (CELA) and the National Network for Equitable Library Service (NNELS) to ensure titles were available to their users.

In 2021, BC SRC received a generous one-time COVID-19 Relief and Recovery Grant from the Ministry of Municipal affairs to seek ways to create more inclusive improvements to the program. As part of the ongoing work made possible by this grant, BC SRC has been working on several ways to build library staff capacity and create accessibility related resources. The following are some projects the program has been working on.

For 2023, BC SRC consulted with NNELS to make changes to the website and online reading tracker for users with print disabilities. Furthermore, new resources were created for the staff website that include two introductory training videos to help library workers (past, present, and future) get acquainted with the program, as well as a BC SRC glossary to provide clear explanations and reduce confusion caused by program and library specific jargon.

BC SRC is also excited to share that the organization is playing a leadership role on a national level by collaborating with TD Summer Reading Club (TD SRC), Library and Archives Canada (LAC), and the New Brunswick Public Library Services (NBPLS) to create a series of professional development workshops on accessibility and inclusion, which will be available for library staff involved in summer reading programs across Canada.

Throughout the summer and fall, BC SRC has been laying the groundwork for how these offerings will take shape. Workshops will begin in 2024 before the SRC season begins, to provide library staff with a variety of workshops lead by disability experts and individuals with lived experience. As part of our research into seeing what accessibility resources are currently available for children's library services, it appears most resources are geared towards adult users. Furthermore, the existing services tend to focus primarily on print disabilities. To address the gaps, these workshops will focus on providing services for children with various disabilities, as well as include separate sessions focused on parents and caregivers of children with disabilities. By providing these as free workshops for any and all library staff interested, BC SRC hopes to see more inclusive programming not just in summer reading programs, but in library services overall.

Our goals for these workshops include:

- build library staff capacity by creating free professional development opportunities and resources

- provide more inclusive and informed library services through summer reading programs
- collaborate and partner with other library organizations to share resources

BC SRC acknowledges that the work surrounding accessibility is ongoing and we will continue to focus on and support this work for years to come.

Ongoing Challenges

While there are a number of accomplishments in 2023 that we are incredibly proud of, there are also a number of ongoing challenges that have impacted BC SRC over the years. One of the largest challenges involves the rising costs to run the program due to inflation and growing interest/participation. Due to inflation, the costs for program materials supplied to libraries has gone up by 5-10% and will continue to go up. Furthermore, as demonstrated by the 12% increase in registration numbers this year, more program materials are needed to support BC libraries.

“The importance of a FREE activity during the summer cannot be overstated. We saw a lot more parents coming in this year who were just desperate for something to keep the kids occupied that didn't cost money. We also received many comments from caregivers about how the stickers and medal motivated their children to read every day when that wasn't something that they were usually interested in doing or were struggling with.”

From New Westminster Public Library Staff

Another ongoing challenge has been communicating with 71 different public library systems across the province that all have varying needs and resources. As a program striving to create equity amongst BC's public libraries, our goal is always to support and empower libraries to run the program to best meet the needs of their communities without trying to lead their programs on their behalf. With that said, some library systems struggle to run BC SRC due to limited staff capacity and resources. While we aim to provide as many free and accessible resources for the program as possible, some library systems have requested more support (such as doing school visits on their behalf, prizes, or additional materials) that we are unable to provide. Furthermore, with limited staff capacities, some libraries opt to not promote additional services that BC SRC offers such as the online reading tracker or the participant feedback survey.

These are challenges that we hope to address in the coming years, while also highlighting that BC SRC is run by a limited core team and has already had additional projects added to its scope over recent years.

Conclusion

For more than 30 years, BC Summer Reading Club has provided public libraries and communities across province with a way for young people and their families to celebrate a love of reading through a welcoming and fun program. We are committed more than ever to continue to provide this high quality, engaging, and free hybrid program that is equitable, accessible, and inclusive for all community members and library workers. As more libraries and communities face challenges caused by inflation, the climate crisis, and staffing limitations, we will continue to work alongside our public libraries and their communities to ensure all children and their families are able to continue to read for fun, engage with their peers, and build lasting connections with their libraries. And lastly, BC SRC continues to review and analyze our work through evidence-based evaluative practices, seek ways to meaningfully lead the program, support library staff, and meet the needs of families and communities across British Columbia.

“The kids really enjoyed the activities and that translated into happier and more active children. We saw a lot of children striving hard to fill up their reading log so they could receive their stickers and prizes, and there were hundreds of books taken out by our summer reading club participants throughout the program. We are seeing a lot more patrons visiting our library when they find out that we offer so much more than just books. Word of mouth is a huge part of our community and very often we will see that people are curious to see our library and are surprised to find out that we are a very unique literary establishment.”
